OFFICE, 25 8 27 Fourteenth St. THURSDAY, FEB. 12, 1874.

A SCENE AT THE FRMALE COLLEGE. Yesterday forenoon two Friends (Quakers) called at the Wheeling Female College and after making themselves acquainted with the Principals and looking through the college, requested permission to address the young ladies briefly on the subject of education. This request was granted them and accordingly the young ladies were assembled in the Audience room to hear what the Quaker brethrep had to say on this subject that concerned them so much. The brethren were not very long in coming to the point. The speaking member of the firm launched out extensively on the vanities of life, the sintulness of so-called modern accomplishments, the waste of precious time in music and sinusements; the indifference to religion that characterized boarding school life, and the great necessity for young ladies spending less time and less money in simply adorning their minds and persons, and paying more attention to their souls. At this point some of the young ladies were so much amused by the canting, whining, and pharisaical style of the caudle lecture administered to them, that they looked at each other in wonderment, at first, and finally wreathed their charming faces in smiles. This was too much for the lachrymose Quakers. The speaker reprimanded their unseemly levity and accused the captivating young ladies of trying to persecute him. But despite persecution he would say his say, yea even though he suffered martyrdom for his plainness of speech, having a great and inexorable duty to perform. The inocent and unsophisticated young ladies took fright at this remark, fearing that the speaker might attempt to martyr himself right then and there in their presence, and from that time on looked sa demure as if they had been bred to the undertaking business.

After the lecture was over, which by the way occupied nearly an hour, Rev. Mr. Royce who, with several other gentlemen was present on the platform, go up and offered a few remarks by way of dispelling the funereal gloom which the martyr had cast over the lages and hearts young ladies. He commenced by telling them that religion was no asceticism. It never was intended to make our pleasures less, or to render our persons or actions repulsive to the people of the world. John the Baptist set an example of asceticism that was neither commended nor followed by Christ when he came. He ate and drank with publicans and sinners. He turned the water into wine at a marriage festival where no doubt there was rejoicing and general enjoyment. He never enjoined the manner in which people should amuse themselves. Such things were safely left to the consciences of Christians. old type of religion was gloomy and forbidding, and it repulsed the young and those who loved the sunshine of life. He did not believe in such a type of religion. It ran counter to too much that was attractive and healthful in life, and cast shadows where shadows already too much

Of course the Quakers did not like such a running comment on their sermon, but of course the young ladies did, and we doubt not that their smiles and approval were matters of far more moment to the speaker than the frowns of the Broadbrims. At all exents the ladles have fully gratified their curiosity to hear a Quaker
